Re: Written Ex Parte Communication, MB Docket Nos. 14-50, 09-182, 07-294

Dear Ms. Dortch:

On June 30, the National Association of Broadcasters filed a request under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) seeking “[m]aterials including, but not limited to, studies, reports, articles, presentations, empirical data, surveys and/or internet sources” considered by the Federal Communications Commission’s (FCC) Media Bureau, Office of Strategic Planning & Policy Analysis, and Chairman Tom Wheeler and his staff in connection with “developing and/or drafting” policies in the above-captioned proceedings.<sup>1</sup> The resulting collection of thirteen documents,<sup>2</sup> which we received on August 16 and is attached hereto, is, to put it mildly, underwhelming. A hollow foundation for research or analysis, the records prove what broadcasters have long suspected – the FCC has taken a purposeful “head in the sand” approach to its required quadrennial examination of the media marketplace.

As the Third Circuit Court of Appeals noted earlier this summer, the broadcast ownership rules “lay the groundwork for how the broadcast industry operates and have major implications for television, radio, and newspaper organizations.”<sup>3</sup> Yet even incorporating the few documents the Commission excluded for licensing reasons – “six broadcast and/or cable advertising cost and revenue reports from SNL Kagan and two Commission staff analyses of broadcast and cable television ratings surveys from The Nielsen Company” – the attached set of documents demonstrates that the Commission’s decision to maintain and even tighten broadcast ownership restrictions has been driven by reasons that have nothing to do with a serious examination of data. Indeed, with the exception of the Knight Foundation study on increasing consumption of news on mobile phones – which actually supports broadcasters’ arguments that they are no longer gatekeepers to information – the records are devoid of useful data. There is zero examination, for example, of the decline of the print newspaper industry; no record about how the Internet has helped democratize the flow of information; and nothing else that suggests the Commission performed the kind of rigorous inquiry that Congress mandated.

Instead, the records include information that was already publicly available, including several that can best be described as “odds and ends.” They contain, for example, the entire Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2016 (which, among other things, blocked the Commission’s retroactive ban on joint sales agreements), two documents that serve only to prove the existence of the CW Television Network, publicly-available correspondence between several senators and FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler, and, perhaps most peculiar of all, the Commission’s “informal timeline” for consideration of merger applications – even as the rules continue to prohibit mergers. According to the FCC’s attached cover letter, these “materials update, supplement and/or support information in the record of the proceeding.”<sup>4</sup>

While the Commission will no doubt argue that the existing record provided enough information on which to base its decision to maintain its analog-era rules, these records expose a particularly lackluster and ultimately arbitrary and capricious effort by the FCC to seek out and consider other information that would show unequivocally how marketplace changes have nullified the need for the rules, at least in their current form. Looking through the attached record, it is impossible to conclude that Commission staff made any serious attempt to examine the issues presented from a fresh perspective. The fact, for example, that Commission staff relied upon a 2014 blog post (again publicly available) from Chairman Wheeler and Commissioner Mignon Clyburn suggests a pre-ordained, results-oriented decision-making process rather than an open-minded approach befitting of an expert agency. This peek behind the curtain is no doubt a disappointment and insult to stakeholders and other Americans that expect the FCC to make thoughtful decisions based on current data.

Ultimately, these records provide further evidence that the Commission’s decision to maintain the existing broadcast ownership restrictions, including the wildly outdated printed newspaper cross-ownership ban, is arbitrary and capricious, and continues to be contrary to law.

Respectfully submitted,

In Reply Refer to:
FOIA 2016-725

Mr. Rick Kaplan
General Counsel
National Association of Broadcasters
1771 N Street, NW
Washington, D.C. 20036

Dear Mr. Kaplan:

This letter is in response to your Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request for materials "including, but not limited to, studies, reports, articles, presentations, empirical data, surveys and/or internet sources" considered by the Federal Communications Commission in connection with "developing and/or drafting policy recommendations" for MB Dockets 14-50, 09-182 and 04-256. Your request specifically excludes "communications that are protected by legal privileges, internal communications and drafts of agency decisions." For the reasons provided below, your request is granted in part and denied in part.<sup>1</sup>

In response to your request, Commission staff searched agency files, but excluded from the search all materials in the public record of the consolidated media ownership rulemaking proceeding as of the date that your request was submitted.<sup>2</sup> Staff identified 21 responsive records, described in the enclosed index. These materials update, supplement and/or support information in the record of the proceeding. The Media Bureau is releasing the records in their entirety, with the exception of eight documents that are withheld pursuant to the statutory exemption protecting proprietary information, as explained herein.

Exemption 4 of the FOIA permits the Commission to withhold from disclosure any documents, or portions of documents, containing either trade secrets or commercial or financial information that is obtained from a person, and privileged or confidential.<sup>3</sup> Where information has been required to be submitted to the agency, the information may be withheld under Exemption 4 upon a showing that (1) disclosure would likely impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or (2) disclosure would likely cause substantial harm

<sup>1</sup> On July 29, 2016, this office provided you notice by e-mail communication that the time for response to your request was extended by 10 business days. The extension was taken pursuant to 47 C.F.R. §0.461(g)(1)(iii) in order to coordinate processing among different Bureaus/Offices within the Commission.

<sup>2</sup> Under 47 C.F.R. 0.461(f)(6), only records in the custody of the Commission at the time a FOIA request is received shall be considered in searching for and locating responsive records.

to the competitive position of the person from whom the information was obtained.<sup>4</sup> If the submission of information was voluntary, it may be withheld on a showing that it is information not customarily released to the public.<sup>5</sup>

Our search for records responsive to your request produced six broadcast and/or cable advertising cost and revenue reports from SNL Kagan and two Commission staff analyses of broadcast and cable television ratings surveys from The Nielsen Company (Nielsen). The Media Bureau has determined that the SNL Kagan materials are licensed commercial research products, made available only by purchase, and that their release may impair the ability of the Commission to obtain information from SNL Kagan for future agency work. With respect to the analyses of Nielsen surveys, the Media Bureau finds that the information they contain is inextricably linked to data provided by Nielsen to the Commission under commercial contract that may not be released without authorization. Accordingly, these documents are withheld from disclosure in their entirety.

Your request has been categorized as "commercial." Under Section 0.470 of the Commission's rules (Assessment of Fees), commercial entities requesting materials pursuant to the FOIA are to be assessed charges that recover the full direct cost of time spent on search, review and document reproduction.<sup>6</sup> This request involved four hours of search by a GS-12 Commission staff member ($50.50/hour), four hours of search and review by GS-14 Commission staff members ($70.96/hour), and seven hours of search by GS-15 Commission staff members ($83.47/hour). The request also involved duplication of 93 pages ($0.10/page). Thus, the total charge for your request is $1079.43.

The Commission's Financial Management Division, Office of the Managing Director, will send you a statement for $1079.43 in the near future. Please remit payment in accordance with the instructions provided on the statement. Payment is due 30 days after receipt of the statement.

If you consider this to be a denial of your FOIA request, you may seek review by filing an application for review with the Office of General Counsel. # Making Good on the Promise of Independent Minority Ownership of Television Stations

December 4, 2014 - 1:52 pm

Increasing minority ownership of television broadcast stations has been an often-stated, but elusive goal. While there is widespread agreement on the need for progress, there has been very little by way of new ideas to solve the twin problems of access and opportunity. For several years, the only path available to minority entrepreneurs required troubling financial dependency and constrained programming choices. With the Media Bureau's approval of several transactions today, however, we see the emergence of new ownership models that will not only bring more independent voices to the station ownership ranks in a manner that promotes diversity, competition, and localism.

Each recent success detailed below is grounded in steps the Commission took this year to rein in abuse of the "sidecar" business model. This allowed television station owners to structure broadcast transactions in ways that openly circumvented our local TV ownership rule, which generally forbids ownership of more than one station in a local market. The effect was to deny opportunities for minority ownership and management.

In aligning our treatment of Joint Sales Agreements (JSAs) for TV stations -- which permitted the larger, financially dominant station in a market to sell advertising for a weaker station -- with that of radio stations, we sought to reduce any influence on programming at the smaller station that might naturally attach to such arrangements. Moreover, allowing major broadcasters to tie up stations as sidecars made it harder for truly independent would-be broadcasters to compete to buy available stations.

In addition, the Media Bureau issued processing guidelines advising broadcasters that the Bureau will look closely at proposed transactions in which stations share services while maintaining extensive financial entanglements, such as options to buy or loan guarantees. Such a combination of arrangements raises questions whether the independent ownership that our rules require truly exists. By enforcing our local TV rule, we sought to achieve its purposes of protecting competition and diversity in local TV markets.

In total, the Bureau approved transactions that will result in ten new minority- and women-owned stations:

- KPEJ-TV, Odessa, Texas, and KMSS-TV, Shreveport, Louisiana. Marshall Broadcasting Group, Inc., owned by Pluria Marshall, Jr., will obtain each of these stations from Nexstar Broadcasting, Inc. Mr. Marshall, an African-American media executive with extensive experience running television and radio stations, began his career at WLBT-TV in Jackson, Mississippi, later becoming Vice President and General Manager at WLBM-TV in Meridian, Mississippi. During his five-year tenure at WLBM-TV, Mr. Marshall tried to become a broadcast station owner four separate times, with each transaction falling through due to his inability to obtain financing. Nexstar will provide financial assistance for no more than five years after closing, with no express or implicit financial support after that date. Use of JSAs is limited to 15 percent of sales, the attribution floor established in the Commission's JSA order. Marshall will acquire its own programming independently of Nexstar, other than the 15 percent of programming for which Nexstar will be allowed to handle advertising sales. This incubation arrangement addresses the difficulty that Mr. Marshall previously encountered in obtaining financing for a station purchase and supports the entry of a new independent voice in these local markets.

- WEVV-TV, Evansville, Indiana. DuJuan McCoy, CEO of Bayou City Broadcasting Evansville, Inc. will become part-owner of WEVV-TV and will run the day-to-day operations; a private investment group will provide the money for the sale. His experience includes over a decade of growing small, medium, and large stations. Mr. McCoy, an African-American, indicated that he has the responsibility to "lay down groundwork for future minorities so that there's some type of track record of success with minorities running television stations."<sup>[1]</sup>
- WMMP(TV), Charleston, South Carolina, WCFT(TV), Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and WJSU-TV, Anniston, Alabama. The Bureau is also approving the sale of stations from Sinclair Broadcasting to Howard Stirk Holdings, LCC, which is owned and controlled by Armstrong Williams. Sinclair will sell these stations rather than turn them in for cancellation as it had previously announced. Mr. Williams, a well-recognized African-American political commentator with years of experience in the broadcast industry, has said that he will obtain programming by, among other things, producing original local public affairs programs aired during prime time.
- KJCT(TV), Grand Junction, CO, KXJB(TV), Valley City, ND, KAQY(TV), Columbia, LA, and KNHL(TV), Hastings, NE. Gray Television, Inc., retained MMTTC Media and Telecom Brokers, the brokerage arm of the Minority Media and Telecommunications Council, to identify and facilitate the transfer of these full-power television stations following the termination of their services agreements with Gray. The sales will provide Ravi Kapur and Sherry Nelson the first opportunity to purchase a full-power television station. Jeff Chang will purchase his second full-power television station.

What we have done in a very short time is foster clear-eyed market-based solutions to the longstanding challenge of low minority broadcast ownership. The examples above indicate real and replicable progress of which the broadcast industry should take note. We look forward to the continued expansion of minority ownership of broadcast stations and invite the participation of all stakeholders in working toward this goal.

Informal Timeline for Consideration of Applications for Transfers or Assignments of Licenses or Authorizations Relating to Complex Mergers

The following timeline generally identifies the tasks the FCC performs in order to complete its review of assignment or transfer of control applications involving complex or difficult issues, and the time normally needed to complete them.

The timeline represents the Commission's goal of completing action on assignment and transfer of control applications (i.e., granting, designating for hearing, or denying) within 180 days of the public notice accepting the applications. Routine applications are decided well within the 180-day mark. It is the Commission's policy to decide all applications, regardless of whether they are highlighted on the web page, as expeditiously as possible consistent with the Commission's regulatory responsibilities. Although the Commission will endeavor to meet its 180-day goal in all cases, several factors could cause the Commission's review of a particular application to exceed 180 days. The timeline is intended to promote transparency and predictability in the Commission's process. For transactions highlighted on the Commission's web page, the timeline provides the public with ready access to information about the status of a pending transaction.

The Commission occasionally receives requests by outside parties to "stop the clock" for a particular transaction. The timeline carries with it no procedural or substantive rights or obligations, but merely represents an informal benchmark by which to evaluate the agency's progress on a particular transaction. Accordingly, stopping the clock is a decision purely within the Commission's discretion.

Further, although the Commission seeks to meet the 180-day benchmark in all cases, its statutory obligation to determine that an assignment or transfer serves the public interest takes precedence over the informal timeline. The Commission's failure to release an order within the 180-day benchmark is not indicative of how it will resolve the issues raised in this proceeding.

We believe that the timeline has been a useful tool for both the agency and the public since it was first proposed in March 2000. We appreciate the comments and suggested changes we have received and continue to invite suggestions on additional improvements we can make to improve further the transparency and predictability of the Commission's assignment and transfer of control processes.

All dates are approximate

Please note that all dates in the timeline are approximate and are subject to change. For example, if a due date falls on a weekend or holiday, the due date will be moved to the next business day and subsequent due dates will be moved accordingly.

Application: Applicants can benefit most from the agency's effort to streamline its process for reviewing applications by providing the Commission with the necessary accurate information in the proper form at the earliest time.

- Applicants' Tasks—pre-Public Notice
  - Identify complete list of licenses and authorizations involved
  - Contact relevant Bureaus
  - Identify appropriate application forms, appropriate filing process, and related applications/requests, in consultation with relevant FCC staff
  - File necessary forms, applications, and special requests for relief

Day 0: Public Notice: Accepting the Applications for Filing

- Minimum requirements for an application to be accepted for filing — facially complete application addressing the relevant issues and providing sufficient support for agency analysis and meaningful public comment, with a complete and accurate identification of all relevant licenses and authorizations
- The Public Notice will generally contain:
  - General nature of applications and related transaction and waivers and other rulings requested by parties, if any
  - List of licenses/authorizations to be transferred/assigned/granted/discontinued, with associated file numbers
  - Due dates for pleadings and instructions how to file comments
  - Designation of proceeding as “permit-but-disclose,” allowing parties to meet with Commission staff and individual Commissioners on an ex parte basis
  - Contact information
- The issuance of the Public Notice starts the 180-day clock.
- A Protective Order limiting access to confidential information may also be issued at or about this same time.

Day 30: Comments and Petitions to Deny Due

- Ordinarily, comments and Petitions to Deny are due 30 days after the Public Notice is issued; occasionally they are due after 45 days
- Persons and entities that file petitions to deny become parties to the proceeding. They may participate fully in the proceeding, including seeking access to any confidential information that may be filed under a protective order, seeking reconsideration of decisions, and filing appeals of a final decision to the courts. Persons who file comments will have those comments duly considered by the FCC but may not have the right to participate in any formal hearing or file appeals to the courts.

Day 45: Oppositions to Petitions to Deny and Comments Due

- Ordinarily, Oppositions are due 15 days after Petitions to Deny and Comments are due. Waiting until the reply stage to introduce arguments and evidence that were clearly available and relevant at the initial application stage is discouraged and may require additional time for public comment that will not be charged against the agency's time clock.

Day 52: Replies to Oppositions

- Ordinarily, Replies are due one week after Oppositions are due.

Day 90: Initial Information Request

- The Commission will endeavor to send to the parties an initial request for information, if necessary, by Day 90 and in many cases will be able to do so earlier. If the Commission does not issue an initial information request by Day 90 it may still do so at any time after this date.

Days 52-180: Analysis of Record; Discussions with Parties

- Analysis of Record; Discussions with Parties.

Day 180: FCC issues Order granting applications...

- FCC issues Order granting applications, granting applications with conditions, or designating applications for hearing (denials without a hearing are possible only in very limited circumstances).

Considerations in “Stopping the Clock”

- The Commission may “stop the clock,” that is, suspend its informal timeline, when the Commission's ability to process and review the merits of an application is impeded by justifiable delay, the parties' actions, or external events. Stopping the clock in such circumstances is intended to provide a more accurate picture of the time the Commission finds necessary to process a particular transaction. Stopping the clock does not itself delay a decision in a proceeding; it merely reflects that a decision could be delayed as a result of some external factor. When this occurs, the Commission ordinarily sends the parties a letter explaining the reason for stopping the clock and posting that letter on the web page. The following are common, but non-exhaustive, examples of reasons for stopping the clock:
  - The Commission extends the time for filing pleadings.
  - The Applicants do not respond to a request for information within a stated time period.
  - The Commission finds it appropriate to await resolution of issues pending before the relevant U.S. law enforcement or national security agencies.
  - The Commission receives significant new information about an application, or the parties file a substantial amendment to the application.
- If the Commission stops the clock, it generally will restart it as soon as the event justifying its stoppage has been resolved such that the Commission's review process is no longer impeded. On rare occasions the clock may be reset to a prior date.

Ipsos Tunes in With Americans: AM/FM Radio Continues to Make Waves in the In-Car Environment

Radio Remains the Preferred Form of Audio Entertainment in the Car, Followed by CDs

New York, NY – A recent survey by Ipsos once again shows that in the car, Americans prefer radio to CDs or streaming services – and that while countless studies claim that music engagement has evolved as the media landscape has changed, research shows that this definitively does not hold true in the car.

The survey showed that in an in-car environment, 84% of Americans use AM/FM radio as their audio entertainment over new technology options. And they're tuning in frequently – 62% say that they listen to the radio at least once a day in their cars and 67% say they turn on their AM/FM radio as soon as they put on audio in the car. Similarly, in the car, the majority (64%) of Americans still use a CD player, keeping an average of 10.5 CDs in their vehicle. While consumers do seem averse to purchasing new CDs (68% say they have not purchased any new CDs in the last year), only 22% of those who aren't buying new CDs say it's because they are replacing the discs with digital streaming services. Most either don't want any new CDs (27%) or find CDs to be too much money (23%).

Cost seems to be a common thread when it comes to in-car entertainment. While there is only a small population of Americans that stream their in-car audio, less than one-third of those are paying for these services. Of those that use streaming digital audio services but do not pay, 80% say they would not be willing to pay in the future.

"The in-car environment is unlike any other when it comes to media behavior," says Thomas Spinelli, Vice President with Ipsos MediaCT. "Our studies show that despite all the technological advances we've made when it comes to digital listening, the vast majority of Americans still prefer AM/FM radio overall and especially expect it to be a part of their cars – in fact, virtually all said they wouldn't buy a car without a radio."

"We're certainly seeing reluctance amongst Americans to pay for music in the in-car environment," continues Spinelli. "The ability to listen to free music is important to Americans, as is their comfort with their current AM/FM setup. However, as new vehicles roll out, many of which are equipped with built in digital music services, we may see a shift in how Americans are thinking about listening in their cars. That being said, the overwhelming current popularity of radio illustrates that advertisers and marketers may want to think more buttons and knobs than bells and whistles – at least when it comes to the in-car environment."

The Honorable Tom Wheeler
Chairman
Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Dear Chairman Wheeler:

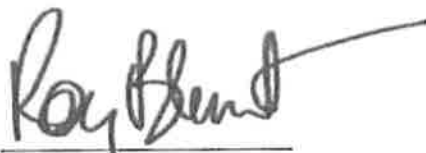

We write regarding action by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to bypass a bipartisan provision signed into law (P.L. 114-113) as part of the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2016.

On March 31, 2014, the FCC ignored bipartisan concerns raised by Congress and adopted a controversial policy that effectively eliminated joint sales agreements (JSAs). These agreements, under which stations jointly sell advertising, often allow local news stations to stay afloat in smaller markets that cannot sustain them independently. We have seen first-hand the benefits of JSAs in our local communities and across the country. JSAs contribute to programming diversity, such as Spanish-language programming, and minority ownership. In one case, a JSA saved lives by providing broadcasters in Joplin, Missouri, with financial efficiencies to upgrade their Doppler radar equipment prior to the devastating May 2011 tornado.

Recognizing the critical role local broadcasters play in communities around our states, Congress took bipartisan action to ensure existing JSAs can continue. As supporters of the provision in P.L. 114-113 that explicitly grandfathers existing JSAs, we are extremely disturbed to learn the FCC is now requiring parties to unwind these agreements in connection with broadcast license transfers.

The FCC is entrusted with an important responsibility to review license transfers, and it must not use these reviews to undermine Congress' clear intent to preserve JSAs that were lawfully executed prior to the FCC's 2014 rule changes. We believe the Commission can successfully address our concerns by taking the following remedial actions: (1) eliminating any conditions imposed on previously approved license transfers that require the termination of JSAs in existence prior to March 31, 2014; and (2) respecting the statutory grandfather of JSAs when evaluating any assignments and license transfers in the future.

We ask for your response no later than April 1, 2016. Thank you in advance for your cooperation in this matter.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION
WASHINGTON

OFFICE OF
THE CHAIRMAN

March 15, 2016

The Honorable Roy Blunt
United States Senate
260 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Blunt:

Thank you for your letter regarding concerns with Joint Sales Agreements (JSAs) in relation to the provision signed into law (P.L. 114-113) as part of the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2016. I appreciate you sharing your views with me.

The Commission is fully complying with the statutory mandate to grandfather JSAs that were in existence prior to March 31, 2014, until September 30, 2025. When a license is sold, however, a new license is issued to a new owner. The former licensee of the station, who was the party to the original JSA, no longer has an interest in the license. The new licensee of the station is not a party to the original JSA, and any resulting new JSA was not "in effect on March 31, 2014." Therefore, there is nothing to grandfather.

We read the statute as affecting the length of the grandfathering period and not the transferability of grandfathered JSAs. The non-transferability of grandfathered broadcast license terms is well-established in Commission precedent. A few examples of such precedent include.

- Newspaper Broadcast Cross Ownership rule. In adopting the 1975 prohibition on the cross-ownership of newspapers and broadcast stations, the Commission held that existing combinations that were grandfathered under the Commission's Order were not transferable and that the future owners would have to comply with the new rule.<sup>1</sup>
- Local Radio and Local TV rules. In revising the local radio and television ownership rules in 2003, the Commission grandfathered existing combinations that would have been out of compliance under the new rules, but made clear that such grandfathering was not transferable and that any future transfer or assignment would have to come into compliance with the new rule.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Amendment of Sections 73.34, 73.240, and 73.636 of the Commission's Rules Relating to Multiple Ownership of Standard, FM, and Television Broadcast Stations, Second Report and Order, 50 FCC 2d 1046, 1076, ¶ 103 (1975). ("In addition, once a sale is to take place the rule would require a split in an existing combination. No divestiture would be effected nor hardship created since this is a voluntary action by the seller. Thus the [new NBCO] rule will apply to all applications for assignment or transfer other than those to heirs or legatees or those for pro-forma changes in ownership.")

March 15, 2016

The Honorable John Boozman
United States Senate
141 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Boozman:

Thank you for your letter regarding concerns with Joint Sales Agreements (JSAs) in relation to the provision signed into law (P.L. 114-113) as part of the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2016. I appreciate you sharing your views with me.

The Commission is fully complying with the statutory mandate to grandfather JSAs that were in existence prior to March 31, 2014, until September 30, 2025. When a license is sold, however, a new license is issued to a new owner. The former licensee of the station, who was the party to the original JSA, no longer has an interest in the license. The new licensee of the station is not a party to the original JSA, and any resulting new JSA was not "in effect on March 31, 2014." Therefore, there is nothing to grandfather.

We read the statute as affecting the length of the grandfathering period and not the transferability of grandfathered JSAs. The non-transferability of grandfathered broadcast license terms is well-established in Commission precedent. A few examples of such precedent include:

- Newspaper Broadcast Cross Ownership rule. In adopting the 1975 prohibition on the cross-ownership of newspapers and broadcast stations, the Commission held that existing combinations that were grandfathered under the Commission's Order were not transferable and that the future owners would have to comply with the new rule.<sup>1</sup>
- Local Radio and Local TV rules. In revising the local radio and television ownership rules in 2003, the Commission grandfathered existing combinations that would have been out of compliance under the new rules, but made clear that such grandfathering was not transferable and that any future transfer or assignment would have to come into compliance with the new rule.<sup>2</sup>

THE CHAIRMAN

March 15, 2016

The Honorable Charles E. Schumer
United States Senate
322 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Schumer:

Thank you for your letter regarding concerns with Joint Sales Agreements (JSAs) in relation to the provision signed into law (P.L. 114-113) as part of the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2016. I appreciate you sharing your views with me.

The Commission is fully complying with the statutory mandate to grandfather JSAs that were in existence prior to March 31, 2014, until September 30, 2025. When a license is sold, however, a new license is issued to a new owner. The former licensee of the station, who was the party to the original JSA, no longer has an interest in the license. The new licensee of the station is not a party to the original JSA, and any resulting new JSA was not "in effect on March 31, 2014." Therefore, there is nothing to grandfather.

We read the statute as affecting the length of the grandfathering period and not the transferability of grandfathered JSAs. The non-transferability of grandfathered broadcast license terms is well-established in Commission precedent. A few examples of such precedent include:

- Newspaper Broadcast Cross Ownership rule. In adopting the 1975 prohibition on the cross-ownership of newspapers and broadcast stations, the Commission held that existing combinations that were grandfathered under the Commission's Order were not transferable and that the future owners would have to comply with the new rule.<sup>1</sup>
- Local Radio and Local TV rules. In revising the local radio and television ownership rules in 2003, the Commission grandfathered existing combinations that would have been out of compliance under the new rules, but made clear that such grandfathering was not transferable and that any future transfer or assignment would have to come into compliance with the new rule.<sup>2</sup>

In Sheldon Adelson's Newsroom, Looser Purse Strings and a Tighter Leash

In late January, about a half-dozen reporters from The Las Vegas Review-Journal gathered at a colleague's apartment after work.

An article about a long-running lawsuit against Sheldon G. Adelson, the paper's new owner, had just been cut in half for the print edition on orders from the top editor, and the reporters were disturbed by what they considered editorial interference. With two other colleagues conferenced in, they discussed the possibility of a byline strike.

"There was a lot of frustration, a lot of venting," Jennifer Robison, a reporter who was at the meeting, recalled in a recent interview. "I remember someone talking about ordering a pizza but nobody was in the mood for anything like that."

The byline strike never materialized. But the hastily arranged meeting underscored simmering tensions in a newsroom experiencing a tumultuous transition under new ownership.

With newspapers struggling to survive, it is not uncommon for wealthy businesspeople to step in and buy them — Jeff Bezos with The Washington Post, for instance, and John Henry with The Boston Globe. Each case presents potential conflicts in covering the owner's businesses, as well as concerns that the owner might attempt to influence coverage.

The problem is particularly acute for The Review-Journal. Mr. Adelson, the chairman of the Las Vegas Sands Corporation, is a casino magnate, a powerful Republican donor, a patron of education and a fierce defender of Israel, and his myriad interests present an almost singular example of how aggressive journalism can collide with the pursuits of a paper's owner.

That new dynamic has roiled the ranks of the newsroom, creating a divide between top editors who see it as part of their job to review coverage of Mr. Adelson, and staff members who chafe at what they perceive as inappropriate interference. In the nearly six months since Mr. Adelson purchased the paper, at least a dozen journalists have quit, been fired or made plans to leave soon; many cite a strained work environment and untenable oversight, in particular regarding the coverage of a bitter legal dispute related to Sands's operations in Macau.

There are advantages to having a billionaire as an owner, staff members agree. The newspaper has hired reporters and a graphic artist, and is upgrading its videography and photography equipment. Some employees, including Ms. Robison, have been given pay raises. A broken sewer pipe under the building has been fixed. Recently, the paper bought drones to use for news coverage.

"We're doing a lot of investment in this newspaper, in the people," Craig Moon, the new publisher, said. "Not only do we want it to be a great place to work but also a great newspaper and a great website."

Mr. Moon and Glenn Cook, the managing editor, say neither Mr. Adelson, 82, nor his associates review articles or direct news coverage. "There's never been any type of correspondence or information or calls from the Adelsons to do anything at this newspaper," Mr. Moon, who reports directly to the Adelson family, said in a telephone interview.

In his first extensive comments on his ownership, provided in written responses to questions from The New York Times, Mr. Adelson said his family bought The Review-Journal "as a financial investment" and hoped to improve its profitability. "We believe it's important that our Las Vegas community has a strong, growing, financially sound newspaper," he said.

Still, current and former staff members describe a newsroom in which employees are mistrustful of top management — a wariness that began with the secret sale of the paper to Mr. Adelson last December and was amplified by the handling of articles related to his family and business interests.

"Morale was already not great, but when Sheldon acquired the paper it was like a boom got lowered," Ms. Robison said. "People would literally joke about, 'What's going to happen if Sheldon buys the paper?' So when he actually did, it was this bizarre feeling, it was just surreal."

After 11 years at The Review-Journal, Ms. Robison left on Friday for a job in corporate communications. James G. Wright, a deputy editor, plans to leave in June. Another staffer who has departed is John L. Smith, a longtime columnist who filed for bankruptcy in 2007 while defending himself against a libel lawsuit brought by Mr. Adelson. After the casino magnate bought the paper, Mr. Smith was told by upper management that he was barred from writing about Mr. Adelson and another casino owner, Steve Wynn.

Among the others who have left are two reporters who covered areas aligned with Mr. Adelson's interests: gambling and stadium subsidies.

"There's no doubt about it — it's disappointing; I've been sorry to see every one of them go," Mr. Cook said in a telephone interview. "But we're going to replace them."

Mr. Wright, Ms. Robison, Mr. Smith and Stephanie Grimes, a features editor who was fired this month, spoke on the record for this article, as did several of the paper's current leaders. Nearly a dozen other current and former employees spoke on condition of anonymity because they feared retribution from Mr. Adelson, who in the past has sued journalists who portrayed him negatively.

Ms. Robison said there was not a "big epiphany" moment that made her decide to leave. "It's been kind of gradual as I've watched things change," she said. "I feel like I can work there for as long as I want, but if I do, I'm going to cross a line I didn't know existed."

The Review-Journal is Nevada's largest newspaper, with a print circulation of about 100,000. From a squat brick building near a freeway interchange known as the "Spaghetti Bowl," its newsroom staff of roughly 100 covers topics central to the city and the state. For decades, those included the many business, political and personal interests of Mr. Adelson.

Then suddenly last December, the paper's employees discovered that they worked for Mr. Adelson; in fact, their reporting uncovered his ownership after he secretly purchased the paper for $140 million through a Delaware-based limited liability company managed by an unknown Connecticut newspaper owner.

The clandestine sale upset many employees and raised concerns about whether Mr. Adelson would use the paper to advance his own agenda. (Mr. Adelson owns a newspaper in Israel, Israel Hayom, which has been accused of being a mouthpiece for the country's prime minister, Benjamin Netanyahu.)

Within two months of the sale, the paper's top executives were replaced. Mr. Moon, a former executive at Gannett, took over as publisher. Mr. Cook, a senior editorial writer at the newspaper, was interim editor in chief until the role was filled in February by J. Keith Moyer, a former publisher of the Star Tribune in Minneapolis.

When he was named interim editor, Mr. Cook said, he decided that he would review all articles related to Mr. Adelson and his business interests. Now, the protocol is that both he and Mr. Moyer review such articles, Mr. Cook said.

Isaac Brekken for The New York Times

Mr. Adelson said he “didn’t ask for the policy” but believed it was appropriate. “I hope the people in charge are fact-checking to ensure that whatever is written about me or my family or my interests is fair,” he said.

Mr. Wright, Ms. Robison and others say they think that top editors are not just reviewing articles, but trying to shape them in ways that make them more favorable to Mr. Adelson.

“The tipping point for me was at the point where every day I was being asked to do things that made me feel uncomfortable — that took me farther away from doing what I would consider quality journalism and more into the realm of presenting things in tune with the owner’s other interests,” Mr. Wright said. He is leaving next month for a yearlong journalism fellowship at the University of Michigan.

Mr. Moyer was traveling last week and was not available for comment. Mr. Cook said: “Keith and I simply want to make sure that our coverage is beyond reproach and is as fair as it can possibly be. We recognize that, especially in the eyes of some people, we’re never going to get it right.”

Journalists say they have become accustomed to periods of calm in the newsroom interrupted by flare-ups; Mr. Wright, Ms. Robison and others describe a strained, and at times adversarial, relationship with the paper’s new leaders. After Mr. Smith, the columnist, resigned in April, Mr. Moyer held a meeting and effectively told reporters that if they were unhappy with his decisions, they could quit.

Immediately after the sale, there was a kind of “we’re in this together” mentality. But now, with so many departures, that sense of connection to the newspaper has largely disappeared.

“Most of what happened breaks my heart,” said Ms. Grimes, the former features editor. “We’ve lost so many good journalists, some that I know wouldn't have left without this happening."

Mr. Adelson runs his business empire from an office at his Venetian resort, reached by a guarded private elevator. It is decorated with magazine covers featuring images of himself. Models of the jets he owns hang from the ceiling over a boardroom table at which he often sits.

Mr. Adelson has not set foot in The Review-Journal's newsroom since the sale, and Mr. Moyer said in an interview last month that the owner "doesn't have anything to do with stories that run in the paper."

In his responses, Mr. Adelson said, "I have never spoken to anybody in the newsroom, nor have we called them to establish news-gathering policies."

He added: "By the way, newspapers are the first of over 50 companies that I started where my employees tell me how to run my business."

In some cases, Mr. Wright and several others said, the paper's new leaders may be making decisions preemptively that they think will please the casino magnate. But they also say they believe that the handling of articles related to Mr. Adelson suggests there is influence from above.

Much of the controversy over editorial interference involves coverage of the Macau-related lawsuit against Sands. Filed in 2010 by a former employee, Steven C. Jacobs, it contains allegations of bribes to officials in Macau. The case, which carries significant ramifications for Sands's casino operations, is sensitive and acrimonious. Mr. Adelson's legal team has repeatedly tried to have the judge in the case removed (unsuccessfully), claiming she is biased.

Suspensions about interference were heightened shortly after Mr. Adelson bought the paper, when The Review-Journal reported that several of its reporters had been asked to monitor three local judges in the weeks before the purchase, including the judge overseeing the suit.

In the ensuing months, Mr. Wright and others say, articles about the suit received particularly close scrutiny. In February, Mr. Wright said, Mr. Cook instructed him to produce an article about a motion filed by lawyers for Sands. Mr. Cook mandated that the article include 12 bullet points from the filing that the Adelson side said showed the judge's bias, without regard for the article's length.

"We were not allowed to summarize or edit them in any way," Mr. Wright said.

When Mr. Jacobs filed a court document, the paper's management chose not to run an article but instead posted the document online. Mr. Cook said the document was so heavily redacted that it was "basically impossible" to write about. For another article about the case, Mr. Wright said, Mr. Moyer removed or condensed material that outlined Mr. Jacobs's arguments, saying the story was too long.

Staff members also point to coverage of Las Vegas Sands's attempt to build an N.F.L.-ready stadium using hundreds of millions of dollars in public funding.

The original version of an article that ran in early February, a copy of which was obtained by The Times, quoted an economics professor as saying it was "the height of hypocrisy" that Mr. Adelson was "preaching to get government out of people's lives, and he turns around and says he needs $780 million to build a new stadium."

Word came down through Mr. Cook that Mr. Moon thought the article focused too much on criticism of Mr. Adelson's proposal, Mr. Wright said. The "hypocrisy" quote, and another saying the plan was "highly risky," were removed before the article was published.

Mr. Wright said the message was sent that "Moon felt that the comments about Sheldon were personally directed and wouldn't be allowed in the story."

Mr. Cook said the quote was removed because it incorrectly characterized Mr. Adelson's viewpoint.

In response to claims of editorial interference, Mr. Cook said: "The notion that editors shouldn't edit stories is pretty silly. The reality is we're supposed to be editing stories, we're supposed to be trying to make them better."

He said it was "not my motivation" to be kind to the owner.

The constant review, though, has fueled frustration in the newsroom. One day in February, a reporter sent an email to editors just after 4 a.m. (a copy was obtained by The Times). Distressed and unable to sleep, the reporter complained that details were inserted into his story that made it inaccurate. If this continued, the reporter wrote, "the newspaper is nothing more than the PR extension of Las Vegas Sands through the Adelson publisher."

"I can't live with that," the reporter wrote. "And I hope you can't either."

In his written responses, Mr. Adelson said he and his family would "continue to invest in the paper and its people." He laid out a vision that included creating an investigative team, adding health and political sections and forming a fact-checking department.

Mr. Wright said he thought there was a "silver lining" to having a billionaire as an owner. "I think he legitimately is interested in having a quality publication, and he doesn't have to worry about the bottom line."

"But it's like a lot of things in life," Mr. Wright added. "Eventually you have to pay the bill. In this case, the bill is you sacrifice some editorial independence to the interests of the owner."

A version of this article appears in print on May 23, 2016, on page A1 of the New York edition with the headline: Adelson's Era: Do Billions Erode Press Freedom?. Order Reprints | Today's Paper | Subscribe

NEWS GOES MOBILE:

HOW PEOPLE USE

SMARTPHONES TO

ACCESS INFORMATION

THE CHALLENGE

Rapid advances in technology have left news organizations scrambling to manage how news is created, consumed and delivered. People have shifted towards accessing news first via desktops and laptops, and now through the ubiquitous smartphone.

Since 2011, the rate of adult U.S. smartphone ownership has increased notably from 46 to 82 percent<sup>1</sup>, and is nearing a saturation point among some age groups. In just the past two years, individual mobile news consumption has grown rapidly. In fact, 89 percent of the U.S. mobile population (144 million users) now access news and information via their mobile devices.<sup>2</sup> As news organizations seek to better manage this digital transformation across platforms, engage with their audience and stay competitive, what should they understand about their audience's changing behavior on mobile news? And, how are diverse audiences approaching access to mobile news and information differently?

This two-part series, excerpted from a custom research study conducted with Nielsen and commissioned by Knight Foundation in September 2015, delves first into several key findings, and then dives into how specific groups of people use different mobile platforms for news.

1. Nielsen Mobile Insights Survey 2011-2015.

2. Nielsen Electronic Mobile Measurement Panel, Average Monthly Penetration, P18+, Oct 2013-Sept 2015.

The findings show that:

- There is a substantial audience for mobile news. Nearly the entire population of adult mobile users consume news on their devices, and more users are spending news time on social platforms.
- While mobile users only spend 5 percent of mobile time on news, on average, the time they do spend includes “hard” news about current events and global news, as opposed to routine weather reports and other forms of “soft” news.
- Mobile users who access news through apps spend more time reading the content, but the overall audience for apps is small, so it’s essential to know who those users are.
- Social media sites and apps are important sources of news for social media users, although television remains their top source. However, social media users also depend on friends, contacts and individuals they follow as trusted news sources as much as or more than they depend on media outlets.
- Mobile news users active on social networks do not just passively engage with news content but take offline action related to the content.

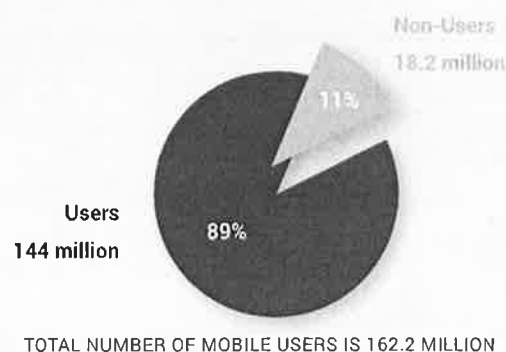

Other studies on mobile news behavior rely heavily on self-reported survey data but Knight Foundation wanted a clearer picture of genuine behaviors. To obtain actual user data, Knight worked with Nielsen’s Electronic Mobile Measurement Panel to conduct a 24-month mobile news trend analysis. Panel recruits use an “always-on” meter on their mobile devices to monitor user activity, both across apps and on browsers. Nielsen also conducted a supplementary, self-reported survey to account for in-app news consumption on social networking sites (for example, reading an article posted on Twitter or Facebook).

AUDIENCE SIZE AND TIME SPENT READING NEWS ON MOBILE

A substantial mobile news audience exists, and many of those users are spending news time on social platforms.

Eighty-nine percent of the adult U.S. mobile population (144 million people) access news and information via their mobile device. While analysis of the mobile news audience shows that it had grown 9 percent from the previous year (see Figure 3), but the increase has recently slowed, suggesting that the mobile news audience is reaching a plateau.

But the activities people perform on mobile is changing. The metered data from the Nielsen panel show that mobile news-seekers, on average, dedicate nearly 5 percent (or more than 2 hours) of their monthly mobile time to news (see Figure 2).<sup>3</sup> However, an analysis of year-over-year changes (see Figure 3) suggests that time spent directly on mobile apps and sites has declined over the past year.<sup>4</sup> This decline contrasts with substantial news activity taking place on social networking platforms.

Indeed, 27 percent of mobile time (more than 12 hours per month) is spent on social networking sites, and Nielsen's supplemental survey showed that half of social networkers spend time looking at news; 70 percent of Facebook users, for example, use Facebook for news every day.<sup>5</sup>

While news organizations with national (or international) reach are experimenting with and active on mobile and social media platforms, many local and regional outlets have been slower to migrate toward the capabilities needed to become "digital-first" operations – meaning their workflow (and the content they develop) prioritizes production for mobile and online platforms over print. Even large publishers and online outlets are wrestling with how to distribute digital content via social channels such as Facebook's Instant Articles to make the most of possible revenue from this large audience.

WHY DEVELOP A NEWS APP

News-seekers spend significant time using apps, but news organizations need to understand the users to maximize the benefits.

The data from the custom Nielsen research study among users of the top 10 mobile news sites and applications show that while the mobile news audience largely uses both app and sites the majority of mobile time is spent within apps (see Figure 5).

The audience, however, is generally much more limited among apps overall. As the Nielsen study illustrates, the audience of Flipboard (a top news aggregator app) is the only one that has been steadily increasing<sup>6</sup> while audiences for other top apps are flattening.

News organizations across the spectrum are grappling with this issue, trying to determine a value proposition for developing a native (or brand) app versus focusing on a mobile responsive site. The audience for apps tends to consist of “power,” or loyal, users, but the audience that uses mobile news sites (versus apps) may be quite different. Figures 6 and 7 highlight the substantial difference between audience size and monthly time spent on top apps versus mobile sites.

6. Flipboard acquired CNN's Zite news app and integrated its users and content in mid-2014, which may account for a slight increase in audience size during that period.

An emerging discussion on the value of apps shows that some publishers believe that discussions around mobile strategy are too app-centric, and they question whether building an app is worth the time and expense. Others are betting that if an app is well designed and the audience is targeted, there could be substantial revenue opportunities. While the answer may look different depending on a news organization's audience and behavior, this area is still wide open for much experimentation.

News Category (Web + Apps)

Nielsen's News and Information Subcategories Defined

Multicategory news: Apps and sites that contain multiple (two-plus) news and information categories.

Current events and global news: Apps and sites that provide information about local, national, and/or world news.

WHAT TYPES OF NEWS CONTENT DOMINATE ON MOBILE

The content users access and how they do it varies by platform.

Nearly half the time spent on news is within what Nielsen classifies as “multicategory news” and all current event and global news content areas on sites and apps.<sup>7</sup> However, weather and reference sites and apps (including dominant sites such as Wikipedia<sup>8</sup>) are the most popular areas in terms of total audience size, with current events and global news not far behind. Multicategory news includes mobile news sites containing multiple areas of news content areas, such as BuzzFeed, Mashable or National Geographic. Figure 8 illustrates that mobile news readers' interests

(and a significant amount of monthly mobile news time) extend well beyond reference information or “soft news”-type weather content.

The supplemental survey of social networkers in the panel provides data as to the frequency of news consumption within social apps (see Figure 9).<sup>9</sup> The data around frequency does suggest that the time spent reading news of all kinds on mobile is greater than the 5 percent of what is trackable given the prevalence of in-app usage.<sup>10</sup>

10. Note that data on mobile time spent on news are drawn only from the metered behavioral data collected by Nielsen from its opt-in Electronic Mobile Measurement panel, which directly measures a users' time spent on their mobile phones. The meter data does not contain news consumption time happening within social media platforms.

The news content accessed looks different in social media and between social platforms. Nielsen's survey also provided more granular insights into the types of news consumed across social media platforms. As Figure 10 illustrates, entertainment news dominates social networking news consumption and patterns of news consumption are similar across Facebook, Twitter and Google+. However, consumption patterns diverge on Instagram and LinkedIn. LinkedIn, for example, is highly accessed by news-seekers looking for tech and financial/business news whereas Instagram's content on lifestyle dominates.<sup>11</sup>

HOW MOBILE USERS ENGAGE WITH NEWS CONTENT

Mobile news-seekers engage both online and off and trust shared content.

The behavioral and survey data illustrate that the audience is immense for news across mobile sites and apps and continues to grow within social platforms. Indeed, social networking apps on mobile compete as a news source with other media forms trailing only TV but pulling ahead of radio, newspapers and magazines among social networkers (see Figure 11).<sup>12</sup>

Moreover, respondents were also asked how they receive their news on select social networking apps. News-seekers depend on friends, contacts and individuals followed as trusted news sources as much as or more than they depend on the media outlets themselves (see Figure 12).<sup>13</sup>

Survey question: Within each of the following social networking apps, how do you receive news?

But what happens after a person accesses news, and how does that person engage with content both online and off? The data from Nielsen's custom commissioned study show that a high number of social network news readers take action after accessing news.<sup>14</sup> More than 80 percent of Facebook, Twitter and Instagram users take action after accessing news, the dominant actions being clicking "like" (in Facebook and Instagram) or "retweeting without comment" (see Figure 13). Typically, the data illustrated that low-intensity forms of engagement are the most common but that rates of higher-intensity forms of engagement were also notable. For example, 59 percent of Facebook users and 41 percent of Twitter users reported that they talk about news somewhere else in person. As publishers think about how they would like audiences to engage with their content, these different platforms offer insights into the opportunities.

CONCLUSION

Part one of this series provides a snapshot of mobile news access across sites, apps and social networking platforms. The data show that a fundamental shift has happened toward accessing news via mobile—and that the landscape continues to evolve. Adapting to and leveraging the opportunities in these evolving audience trends in news behavior is critical to any news organization's survival.

14. Survey question leading to this insight was "Within each of the following social networking apps, what kind of actions do you often take after accessing news? Select all that apply for each app." Answer list included Facebook, Twitter, Google+, Instagram and LinkedIn. The term "accessing news" was self-defined by respondents and could indicate actions such as reading a headline, reading the synopsis of a post or clicking through to an article.

MOBILE AMERICA:

HOW DIFFERENT

AUDIENCES TAP MOBILE

NEWS

INTRODUCTION

Millennials loom large in mobile usage (85 percent have a smartphone<sup>15</sup>), but data on how news is accessed (and by whom) paint a more complex and evolving demographic picture.

Demographic shifts (by age, race/ethnicity and income) and changing behaviors in mobile news usage could have profound implications for both legacy and upstart news providers. In the mobile era, the reality may be that news organizations must have astute targeting and audience development, as well as flexibility with digital strategy.

Over the past decade, news organizations have been managing a sea change in the way news is consumed and delivered. In just the past two years, individual mobile news consumption has grown rapidly. In fact, 89 percent of the adult U.S. mobile population (144 million users) now access news and information via their mobile devices.<sup>16</sup> As news organizations look to manage this digital transformation, engage with a changing audience base, and stay competitive, what should they understand about how different audiences approach access to mobile news and information?

This second installment of Knight's two-part series on mobile news usage takes a deeper dive into specific demographics and different mobile platforms. Highlights from the custom research study conducted with Nielsen showed that:

- The mobile news user base as a whole reflects the current U.S. population with all its racial, ethnic and economic diversity.
- The younger generations of mobile news users are actively consuming news, but in a different way; they tend to find news through social media and emerging chat apps.
- An increasingly diverse mobile news user base offers glimpses of the future news audience.
- The information and reference site Wikipedia is linked to news behavior and is a critical pathway to the news and information ecosystem.

WHO'S ACTIVE ON MOBILE NEWS

The audience for mobile news is more diverse than at first glance.

The emerging demographic variations among social networking news users certainly offer a glimpse into the future audience for news.<sup>17</sup> While the entire EMM panel provides an overarching demographic snapshot of the mobile news audience, part one of this mobile research showed that much of mobile news time is happening within social networks.

17. The social networking survey confidence interval was 95 percent. The survey was conducted online, in English, and weighted on age, gender and education. While we can look at attitudinal and behavioral variations among racial/ethnic groups, the data are not necessarily representative of these groups, as it was not weighted using these variables. For a full description of survey methodology, please see the section at the end of this document.

18. Please note that all EMM panelists are recruited in English only and may not be fully representative of the Hispanic population.

SNAPSHOTS FROM THE NIELSEN MOBILE PANEL

Metered Behavioral Data mobile news consumer (on sites and news apps)

Users skew older adult (ages 35+) and higher income, but in line with racial/ethnic groups compared to the general population.

6 in 10 are non-Hispanic whites who are employed and/or with household incomes above $50,000.

Lower-income households (less than $50,000) also seek out news on mobile at 37.6 percent of all mobile news users.

Among minority populations, Hispanics lead mobile news-seeking in all categories.<sup>18</sup>

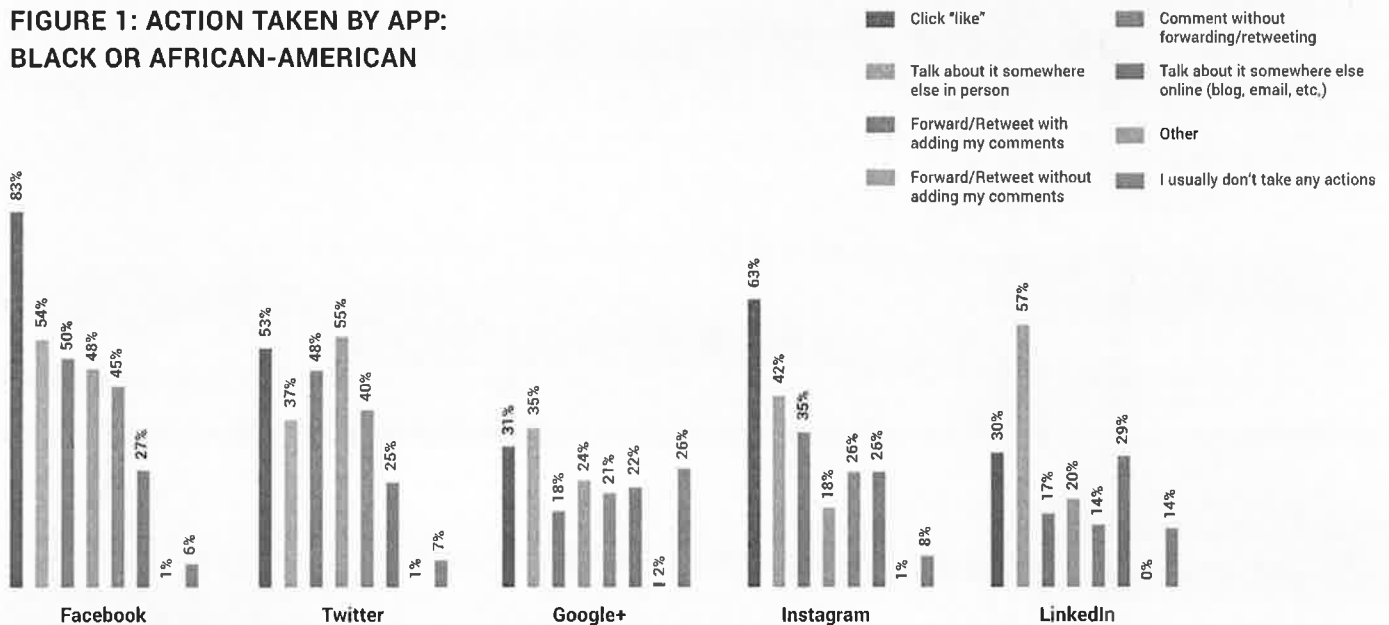

As education increases, so does time spent on mobile news.

Older millennials (ages 25-34) tap into news earlier in the day and are slightly more likely than their younger counterparts (ages 18-24) to seek out mobile news.

FINDING OF IN-APP SOCIAL NETWORKING SURVEY MOBILE NEWS CONSUMER

Overall, younger millennials (ages 18-24) and the affluent ($75,000+) are more likely to seek news within social networking apps.

BLACK OR AFRICAN-AMERICAN

These survey data also hint at the distinct behaviors emerging among various demographics and how they engage with mobile news. For instance, African-Americans actively engage on certain social media platforms. They are more likely to “like” tweets on Twitter and forward posts with commentary on Instagram (see Figure 1).<sup>19</sup>

Moreover, other mobile research conducted by Nielsen indicates that Hispanics are intensive smartphone users spending on average more than 14 hours a week for app, audio, video and web purposes.<sup>20</sup> Given that projections suggest that this demographic will account for more than half of the U.S. population growth in less than five years, understanding evolving behavior among this large and diverse demographic could help news content providers develop and target relevant audiences.

The metered data show that mobile news-seekers are also roughly evenly split between men and women but begin to diverge when looking at social apps for news.<sup>21</sup> With the exception of LinkedIn, women were more likely than their male counterparts to seek news across the five social networking platforms studied (see Figure 2).<sup>22</sup>

HOW PEOPLE ACCESS NEWS CONTENT

The pathways—and who's coming—to news content are varied and evolving.

Nielsen metered data reveal that search, email and social networking sites are launching pads for news-seeking activity in both apps and mobile sites.<sup>23</sup>

Email newsletters that drive audience to news content are often not appreciated as much as social networks, but they are worth highlighting (see Figure 3). It seems that news-seekers still value curated content that lasts longer than a feed and that they have chosen to opt into.<sup>24</sup> The challenge for publishers in the mobile age is to be nimble not just in one channel but several.

Information and reference sites are linked to news behavior and often drive traffic to news content. Wikipedia figures prominently in mobile content access.

Among mobile sites, Wikipedia reigns in terms of popularity (the app does well too) and amount of time users spend on the entity. Wikipedia's site reaches almost one-third of the total mobile population each month (see Figure 6).<sup>25</sup> Current news and events are often embedded within Wikipedia entries so it presents an opportunity to learn about an area of interest after reading a news article. What is clear from the Nielsen data is that the popular information site also drives traffic to news. For instance, Wikipedia was one of the top 10 websites visited prior to exploring sites as varied as BuzzFeed, Daily MailOnline, nytimes.com, usatoday.com, washingtonpost.com and Tribune Newspapers.<sup>26</sup> social sites and chat apps such as Snapchat, Facebook Messenger, Google Hangouts, Instagram and Pinterest tend to be younger and more ethnically diverse.

YouTube referrals also play prominently among young millennials (ages 18-24). Conversely, mobile apps such as ESPN, Yahoo Stocks and Yahoo.com tend to bring in an older (ages 35+) and more affluent audience.<sup>27</sup>

The referral analysis also highlighted some notable players among younger and diverse audiences. Among mobile sites, BuzzFeed and Reddit dominate in bringing in young millennials to other mobile news sites. Those sites, in addition to CNN and Facebook, are also more likely to lead diverse audiences such as Asians and Hispanics to other mobile news content.<sup>28</sup> For example, figures 4 and 5 highlight the audience profile of BuzzFeed and Facebook as referral sources to other news sites – with higher concentrations of referrals coming from both younger and older millennials (ages 18-34) and Asians, Hispanics and Other Races highly represented.<sup>29</sup>

WHERE THEY COME FROM AND WHO THEY ARE

Young millennials (ages 18-24) are 3 and 4x more likely than typical online adults to go to news content from Instagram, Pinterest and Snapchat.

African-Americans are 2.5x more likely than typical online adults to go to news content from Twitter.

29. Ibid.

Reddit users are also going deeper into the content. Reddit devotees go to the app often (twice a day) and spend roughly five times the amount of time with Reddit's app than other top news apps.<sup>30</sup> The popularity of this discussion forum and news aggregator app among younger audiences may suggest a tendency toward accessing multiple news source perspectives but also a desire for news that is personalized to their interests. Publishers of all sizes are reckoning with news aggregations' impact—whether through social media platforms or news apps—on their traditional distribution channels and related revenue models.

CONCLUSION

Part two of this series provides a snapshot of the evolving mobile news audience, as well as the behaviors on different social media platforms. Mobile pathways to news content can help news organizations better understand the changing demographics of those news consumers, as well as the impact to discourse that these demographic forces may entail. Overall, the data show that a fundamental shift has happened toward accessing news via mobile—and that the landscape continues to evolve. Adapting to and leveraging the opportunities in these audience trends in news behavior remains critical to any news organization's survival.

METHODOLOGY

Behavioral Insights Methodology

Nielsen's Electronic Mobile Measurement 3.0 is an observational, user-centric approach that uses passive metering technology on smartphones to track device and application usage on an opt-in convenience panel. At present there are approximately 9,000 panelists in the U.S. across both iOS and Android smartphone devices. Because the behavior is being tracked without interruption, this method provides a holistic view on all the activity on a smartphone.

A number of steps are taken after the data collection process to ensure that the reported data are representative of the adult mobile population. Weighting controls are applied across five characteristics (gender, age, income, race and ethnicity), while independent enumeration studies are carried out on a continuous basis to provide the most current estimate of the mobile population (aka Universe Estimation). Recruitment is conducted in English.

Survey Insights Methodology

Nielsen Electronic Mobile Measurement (EMM) Panel collects smartphone and tablet users' behavioral data of application (app) and website usage.

- A five-minute online survey, regarding news-seeking behaviors within social networking apps, was conducted among social networking users of EMM Panel in October 2015.
- The sample of mobile social networking users, including 2176 respondents, was weighted based on EMM Panel's Q3 2015 benchmark data of smartphone<sup>31</sup> social networking users. Weighting variables include age, gender, income and education.*
- Among the sample of mobile social networking users, 1078 respondents were identified as those who consume news within top five social networking apps (Facebook, Twitter, Google+, Instagram and LinkedIn).
- To facilitate a better recall, all behavior questions in this survey were asked based on the most recent-30-day time frame.
- "News" was defined for the survey participants as "current events happening somewhere, which could include a range of topics, such as world, U.S., technology, sports, entertainment, etc."

*Note: The survey was conducted online, in English, and weighted on age, gender and education. While we can look at attitudinal and behavioral variations among racial/ethnic groups, the data are not necessarily representative of these groups, as it was not weighted using these variables.

31. Among those 2,176 mobile social networking users, only 47 respondents (2 percent) do not use smartphones (they use only a tablet).

New radio stations broadcast to underserved neighborhoods

By HANNAH WEIKEL - Associated Press - Saturday, December 19, 2015

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - After many years of fighting for airspace, community radio is making a comeback in the Twin Cities.

The Minnesota Daily (<http://bit.ly/1Y7Ni2S>) reports that four new low-power FM radio stations across the Twin Cities have secured licenses from the Federal Communications Commission to broadcast their content to specific communities, like the local Somali-American population.

South Minneapolis' KALY, a Somali-language station, and St. Paul's WFNU Frogtown Community Radio are working with Prometheus Radio Project to establish their stations.

KALY started broadcasting in late

September and is now working with South Minneapolis neighborhood organizations to attract awareness and listeners, director Mahamed Cali said.

The station plays Somali music and transmits local news in the language to appeal to the large Somali-American community in Minneapolis and near the University of Minnesota, Prometheus Radio Project technical director Will Floyd said.

KALY is the first Somali-American FM radio station in the country, he said.

"We send volunteers to listen at neighborhood meetings to hear what they are talking about with important issues," Cali said. "And when we get the chance to talk to them we ask if they would like to partner with us to discuss these issues on the radio."

Guests, like officials from Minneapolis Public Schools, have appeared on the show to talk about topics like checking their kids' grades and getting in touch with teachers, he said.

"We want to empower the people who don't know how the schools work," he said, "because Minnesota has one of the biggest education gaps between black and white."

Two of the four new stations, including WFNU, are working to garner neighborhood support and funding before hitting the air, which Floyd said can be hard to attract.

So far, KALY has secured sponsorship from local organizations like Afro Deli near the University's West Bank campus, Cali said. Now, they're looking to state and federal grant funding for more long-term support.

"We want to create a permanent space where people can come and speak and share their ideas and put together a show and really give something to their community," Frogtown Neighborhood Association radio coordinator Julie Censullo said.

Frogtown has yet to install a radio antenna, though several DJs are already performing over the web, she said.

The Telecommunications Act of 1996, Floyd said, stymied community radio stations in cities across the country.

"The Act allowed the merging of news organizations, including radio stations," he said. "Before there were lots of mom and pop stations, but they were bought up by large corporations."

These mergers created a national shortage of community radio programming, Floyd said. Even today, he said, large cities - where low-power stations weren't allowed to form until 2013 - lack neighborhood stations.

Frogtown Community Radio DJ Charles Moss, also known as DJ ChuckSmooth, said he thinks his high school DJing experience prepared him for radio.

"The radio has allowed me to fulfill a dream I had shelved but also work with different cultures in the neighborhood," he said. "It provides a much-needed platform for community voices."

WFNU and KALY aim to bring positive news to the community to counteract local stations' stories on crime and poverty, Censullo said.

"There's so much media today that (homes) in on negativity," Moss said. "We want to pull out more positivity and be the voice of Frogtown and of St. Paul."

Frogtown Community Radio hopes to build their station and be on air by early 2016, Censullo said.

"Logistically, our goal for the future is to get on FM, to get an antenna up and get funding for the future," she said.

Media General Completes Sale of Newspapers to Berkshire Hathaway

RICHMOND, Va. - Media General, Inc. (NYSE: MEG) today completed the previously announced sale of 63 daily and weekly newspapers to World Media Enterprises, Inc., a subsidiary of Berkshire Hathaway, Inc. (NYSE: BRK.A and BRK.B), for $142 million in cash, subject to adjustment for working capital and other items. After transaction fees and the repayment of funds drawn on the revolving credit facility, Media General will use the net proceeds from the newspaper sale to offer to repay on a pro rata basis existing senior secured notes at par and a term loan with no prepayment penalty.

Media General is also in discussions with prospective buyers for its Tampa, Florida, print properties and associated websites.

"Selling our newspapers represents a monumental change for us – we've been in the newspaper business for more than 160 years. However, our model has been shifting more toward Broadcast and Digital in recent years," said Marshall N. Morton, president and chief executive officer of Media General. Broadcast television accounted for 77 percent of total Platform Cash Flow for the full year 2011 and for 87 percent in the first quarter of this Political year.

"We will now focus on our higher margin Broadcast television business. We have an attractive economic model, fueled by revenue growth, including Political, Retransmission and Digital revenues. For the second quarter of 2012, we expect to report Political revenues of more than $7 million, reflecting spending by both presidential campaigns, Super PACs, and contested races in our markets, including the Massachusetts Senate race and primaries in Virginia and South Carolina. We now expect Political revenues for the full year 2012 to be at the high end of our previously announced range of $40-45 million," Mr. Morton said.

"Our plans are underway to increase Broadcast cash flow and EBITDA margins. At the market level, we are focused on ratings and share increases as well as expense management. At the corporate level, as previously announced, we are reducing corporate expense from $32 million to $20 million, a run rate we plan to achieve before the end of this year. The increased cash flow will support and accelerate our deleveraging plan and we have good incentive to do so. Our new term loan agreement provides a stepdown in the interest rate from 10.5 percent to 9 percent if leverage were to reach 3.50x," Mr. Morton said.
