

Where do Americans turn during times of crisis?

For lifesaving information, viewers depend on local TV.

The federal government is currently making decisions about how the airwaves are used. We must ensure those decisions do not limit television's ability to innovate or jeopardize the local news, emergency information and high quality programming on which hundreds of millions of Americans rely.

Protect TV viewers – and your constituents – by ensuring sound spectrum policy does not threaten their access to local news or hinder ongoing and future innovations.

The future of TV is bright, and we want to ensure it stays that way.
