

Keep Local Radio Strong

There's a new bill in Congress that could devastate minority-owned radio stations – particularly as they are still recovering from the economic challenges of the pandemic. The so-called "American Music Fairness Act" would impose fees on local radio stations simply to play music. Money from a new performance tax would go directly to the big, foreign-owned record labels, and ironically, hurt artists' greatest promotional tool.

Radio is still one of the best ways to introduce artists' music to their fans. A performance tax would upend a mutually beneficial relationship between radio and artists that has thrived for more than a century.
