

First the record labels said it wasn't a tax ... Now they aren't telling you the money migrates overseas ...

The recording industry is asking members of Congress to force local radio stations in their districts to subsidize the outdated business model of giant international conglomerates.

While three of the four major record labels are located outside the U.S., free, local radio stations are the lifeblood of towns and communities right here in our country — delivering vital local news, weather and emergency information to your constituents.

Local radio stations have been the driving force behind music sales in this country for years. In fact, economists estimate radio provides anywhere from $1.5 to $2.4 billion dollars each year in free promotion for artists and their labels.

Don't let the recording industry hurt local radio stations just to put money in the hands of big international companies.

Say no to performance tax on local radio.
